

ISLAMIC ECONOMICS

Economics has existed for centuries, and so has the study of this discipline. However, with the rise of industrialization, inflation, and other financial challenges, a superior alternative to the standard secular studies needs to be used. As a result, studying this field from an Islamic perspective has become increasingly relevant in modern society. It continues to increase in popularity as a significant area of study due to the crucial role of banking and finance. Financial transactions should be conducted in a halal (lawful) manner as, “Allah has permitted trade and forbidden interest.” (Surah al-Baqarah (2):275)
